REFLECTIONS ON THE PEACE AND JUSTICE SYMPOSIUM

A questionnaire which was handed out to a random sampling of faculty and students gives evidence that several aspects of the recent Symposium on Justice and Peace provoked deep thought in the minds of those participating.

"The symposium gave me a much clearer understanding as to what the issues of justice and peace are," student Barbara Kivlehan commented. "I disagreed, however, with the issues of the peace and justice symposium concerning disarmament and redistribution of wealth," she added. Another student, Susan Costa, remarked that "I definitely think that a symposium of this kind should be offered every year. I was greatly impressed by the speakers."

Sister Mary Eloise Tobin felt that "the symposium did reinforce and deepen what I already had been reading in the Documents of Vatican II and vitalized them."

There were several suggestions on how the symposium might have been improved. One student commented that "the format left me uninvolved; I could not ask a question because the speaker did not warrant any comment. I would like to see a symposium held with greater practicality." Other participants remarked that they liked the format, while some suggested that there be a time limit given to the reactors after a lecture. Several symposium participants remarked that, if a similar event were to be held in the future, discussion groups and workshops might be formed after the general talk. One participant expressed the opinion that the religious aspects of justice and peace were overly stressed, and that although the rich and poor were discussed, the middle class was not.

Many of those questioned would like to see a symposium of this type take place every year, or at least every other year. When asked if they would like to see a different topic handled in this manner, there were many proposed themes. One student felt that the topic of morals and values as they pertain to college might prove interesting. Another student would like to see career discussions, and talks concerning the legal rights of students handled with a symposium format. Brother Gene Lappin suggested the themes of ethics in business and government.

Several participants commented on the caliber and effectiveness of the symposium speakers. Sisters Mary Jean and Eloise Tobin were very enthusiastic regarding the lecture given by Sister Emil Penet of the Weston School of Theology. Sister Mary Jean credited her lecture with a "brilliant combination of the creative and the expository; of myth and the truths inherent within it; of the timely and the timeless." She further described Sister Emil as "a person - delicately tuned to the rhythm and beat of the twentieth century; a scholar - profoundly simple; above all, a religious dedicated first of all to her vocation

Sister Eloise remarked that she admired Sister Emil for "her creativity, her scholarship, her gentleness, and her wisdom in the true biblical sense of the term." Others commented on the lecture of Mr. Spencer Sacco, describing it as "interesting and informative."

Brother Gene Lappin summed up by stating that "everyone I've talked with who attended the Symposium -- students, faculty, participants -- seemed to find it excellent! Many are looking forward to the next."

NEWSNOTES

Easter Seal Drive

Last week, members of the College Community experienced an alternate form of education, as the Newport College held its Symposium on Peace and Justice. Several well-known theologians, philosophers, and educators spoke "in an attempt to raise the consciousness of administrators and students to issues of peace and justice so that the College can move forward in its claim to Catholicity." Sr. Marie Augusta Neal, in her presentation, "Christians Facing Third World Peoples" challenged our Christianity as she provided an index of our ignorance. As members of the College Community, let us rise up to this challenge as the Easter Seal Fund Drive begins on campus Monday, March 20, 1978.

Volunteers will be collecting from the resident halls and the administration and faculty offices. Co-ordinating the Fund Raising on campus is Marcin Rembisz at Founder's, Ext. 324. Please feel free to call for any information or to make a donation. Please help to make this drive a big success and contribute!!
