GENE PANEL WILL PROBE ROLE OF AMERICAN TEACHER

A panel discussion by prominent Rhode Island educators and psychologists on the role of the teacher in America today will be held at Salve Regina College Thursday at 7:30 p. m. in Ochre Court. The program is sponsored by the Student National Education Association of Rhode Island. The public is invited.

Taking part in the program are panel leader Sister

Marie Susanne, R.S.M., chairman of the Psychology Department and director of Counseling Services at Salve Regina College; William Young, of Barrington College's Department of Education; Milo J. St. Angelo, counselor, Providence school system; and Jason Blank, assistant professor of Sociology and director of the Office of Institutional Research at Rhode Island College.

The discussion will follow a showing of the film,

The Influential American, narrated by Howard K. Smith, and exploring the role of the American teacher with particular focus on team-teaching and how it operates in the Lexington School System.

Salve Regina College junior Belinda St. Angelo, first vice president and president-elect of the Rhode Island Student Education Association, will act as official hostess. Other members of the executive committee are: Lynne Murphy, Rhode Island College, president; Richard Johnson, Barrington College, second vice president; Mary McConnon, Rhode Island College, secretary; Nancy Huling, Salve Regina, treasurer; and Robert Fiske, Barrington College, historian.

A coffee hour will follow the program.
