Salve Regina College has joined the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education (AACTE) according to an announcement today by Dr. William Burrell, dean of the college.

The Association is a group of colleges and universities committed to better teacher education. Members sponsor conferences, task forces, publications and projects designed to improve the education of teachers. More than 860 colleges and universities belong to AACTE, and together they educate more than 90 percent of the nation's teachers.

Salve Regina College has been educating teachers for 26 years. The college offers a Bachelor's degree in a student's chosen field plus certification in art, elementary, secondary and special education.
