The Business Management Department at Salve Regina College is sponsoring a special gathering at the college to introduce its program of studies. The meeting will be held on Wednesday, November 20, 6PM - 7PM, in the O'Hare Academic Center.

Dr. William Burrell, Dean of the College, points out that Salve Regina will be able to serve a whole new student population through its courses in management. "A person will be able to take one course in a special area of interest, or a complete program, leading to an A.S. degree or to a B.S. degree in Business Management. Those students who are interested in other areas such as sociology, psychology, political science, or nursing will now have the option of electing a minor in management. We are quite excited about the new dimensions of study which this program will make available."

Like the college's new Master's program in Human Development, the management program will be directed by a committee of faculty and administrators during its initial year. The central objective of the department is to provide each student with a thoroughly-professional program which will allow him to master the fundamental skills necessary for continued growth in a rapidly changing field.

The courses in the program will be taught in evening sections, and everyone in the community is invited to come to Wednesday's meeting to learn more about Salve Regina's new program in business management.
