The Salve alumna taught for many years at Elmhurst Academy in Providence and in the North Providence public schools. Currently, she teaches part-time at Our Lady of Providence High School in Providence and volunteers to work with the elderly in the community. She is married and has four children.

Farley is being honored for her "longstanding service to the Salve community, beginning over 30 years ago." She is also called "one of the tradition-makers." The award notes her role in "establishing the Salve tradition of excellence in education and excellence in service to others."

Salve alumni from the classes of 1956, 1961, 1966, 1971 and 1976 will also be on campus this weekend. Events include campus tours, class reunion parties, an arts festival and a dinner/dance in Ochre Court on Saturday, May 2. The 1981 Outstanding Alumni Award will be presented Sunday, May 3 at 12 noon during a brunch in Ochre Court.
