Neither rain, nor sleet nor snow kept faculty, staff and students away from the Senior Class Auction held on Thursday, January 19th in Carey Mansion. Despite a heavy snowfall, over 200 people attended the auction which proved to be an entertaining and successful event.

The 90 gifts contributed by faculty and staff members brought in over $1,200 to be donated to the Alumni Fund as the senior class gift. A few of the gifts that went for the ceiling bid of $50 were: a sailboat outing with Dwight Webb; a hand-knitted sweater by Catherine Graziano; a trip to the Roger Williams Zoo with Diane Caplin; lunch with GQ model, John Toppa, donated by his mom, Mary Toppa; a Salve Regina Captain's chair, donated by Sister Therese Antone and reservations for two to the 1984 Governor's Ball, given by Sharon Caine.

Auctioneers, Angelo Marinosci and Peggy Denness did an outstanding job entertaining the enthusiastic crowd, while auctioning off the numerous gifts.

Many thanks to all faculty, staff and students whose participation helped make the evening a memorable event!

Salve is offering an innovative master's program in Health Services Administration. The program is comprehensive in scope and designed to increase the skills, knowledge and capabilities of health professionals preparing them to deal with the complexities which have come to define the health field. The program is under the direction of Dr. Dennis Robbins.

The changing character of the health care system necessitates an administrator who is capable of dealing effectively with internal and external mechanisms which may pose constraints to the delivery of health services. The advent of new medical and computer technologies, increased regulatory activity and ethical problems surrounding cost containment, the right to die and the right to refuse treatment, all have bearing on the delivery of health services in America. Consequently, administrators are not only expected to oversee the implementation of good health care, but to do so within a constantly evolving and problematic system.

The new graduate program is comprised of several tracks including Health Law and Regulation, Long Term Care, Gerontology and Health Finance. Teaching these courses are distinguished practitioners in the health field. Health Law is taught by Thomas Gidley, J.D. of Hinckley and Allen, a Rhode Island law firm recognized for its participation in numerous malpractice suits. His associate, Gerald Goulet, teaches Health Regulation and holds both a J.D. and a Ph.D. Other faculty members include a vice president of Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Rhode Island, vice president of St. Joseph's Hospital, a chief financial officer from Bradley Hospital and faculty from the Naval Regional Medical Center, Woonsocket Hospital and Kent County Memorial Hospital.

The program is unique not only in its design and mission, but it is the only program of its kind in Rhode Island. Boston University, Harvard and Yale are the only other institutions in the Northeast which offer a master's in Health Services Administration.

The program requires 39 credit hours of course work. Each student is assigned an Ad Hoc Committee of faculty and administrators who, together with the student, plan and oversee the student's program.

For further information on the HSA program contact Dr. Dennis Robbins at ext. 221 or 260.
